ProSocial Safety Tips

Never Send Money or Share Financial Information

If another user on an outing asks you to send money, especially over wire transfer, even if the person claims to be in an emergency. Wiring money is like sending cash — it's nearly impossible to reverse the transaction or trace where the money went. Never share information that could be used to access your financial accounts. If another user asks you for money, report it to us immediately.

Protect Your Personal Information

Never share personal information, such as your social security number, home or work address, or details about your daily routine with people you don't know. If you are a parent, limit the information that you share about your children on your profile and in early communications. Avoid sharing details such as your children's names, where they go to school, or their ages or genders.

Report All Suspicious and Offensive Behavior

Whenever someone violates our Community Rules, make sure that you report them. Here are some examples of violations:

- Requests for money or donations
- Underage users
- Harassment, threats, and violence
- Inappropriate or harmful behavior during or after meeting in person
- Fraudulent profiles
- Spam or solicitation including attempts to sell products or services
- You can report any concerns about suspicious behavior by emailing prosocialapplication@gmail.com

Protect Your Account

Be sure to pick a strong password, and always be careful when logging into your account from a public or shared computer. ProSocial will never send you an email asking for your username and password information — if you receive an email asking for account information, report it immediately.

Meet in Public and Stay in Public

All ProSocial outings are in public spaces. If any user from an outing asks you to leave the group and go out by yourself into a private location, refuse the request and report the behavior. If the user persists, then leave the outing.

Tell Friends and Family About Your Plans

Tell a friend or family member of your plans, including when and where you're going. Have your cell phone charged and with you at all times.

Be in Control of Your Transportation

We want you to be in control of how you get to and from your outing so that you can leave whenever you want. If you're driving yourself, it's a good idea to have a backup plan such as a ride-share app or a friend to pick you up.

Know Your Limits

Drugs or alcohol can impair your judgment and your alertness. If a user tries to pressure you to use drugs or drink more than you're comfortable with, hold your ground and end the outing.

Don't Leave Drinks or Personal Items Unattended

Only accept drinks poured or served directly from the bartender or server. Many substances that are slipped into drinks to facilitate sexual assault are odorless, colorless, and tasteless. Also, keep your phone, purse, wallet, and anything containing personal information on you at all times.

Leave If You Feel Uncomfortable

ProSocial is designed to be fun, not scary. If your instincts are telling you something is off or you feel unsafe, ask a business employee for help.
